

View across the city of Pekin, showing the roofs of the palaces in the Forbidden City, where the boy "Emperor" still dwells surrounded by all the rigorous etiquette of the dragon throne.

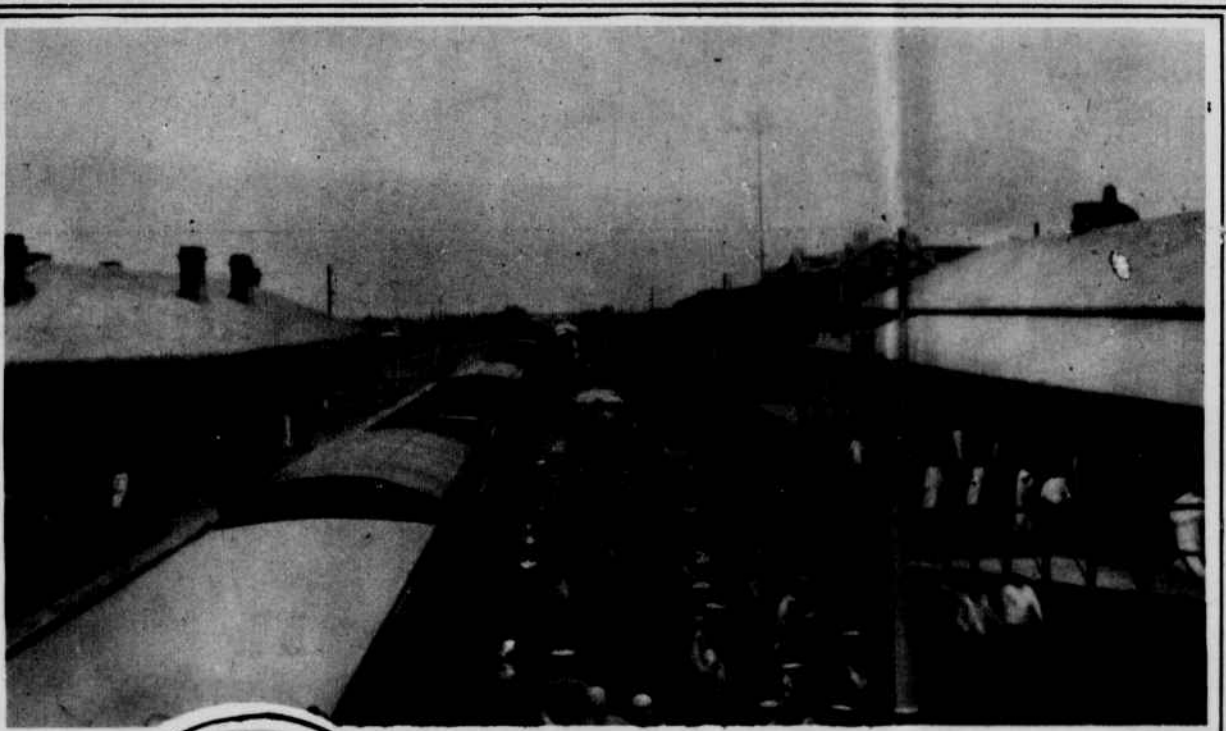

Shanghai, on the Woosung. The harbor is the main entrance to the land of the open door.

Above—A northern Chinese traffic man in the British municipality of Tientsin.

China's original effort to keep out foreigners was the building of the "Wall of Ten Thousand Miles." This photograph shows part of the great barrier thirty miles from Pekin.

Photos by H. W. Couenhoven.

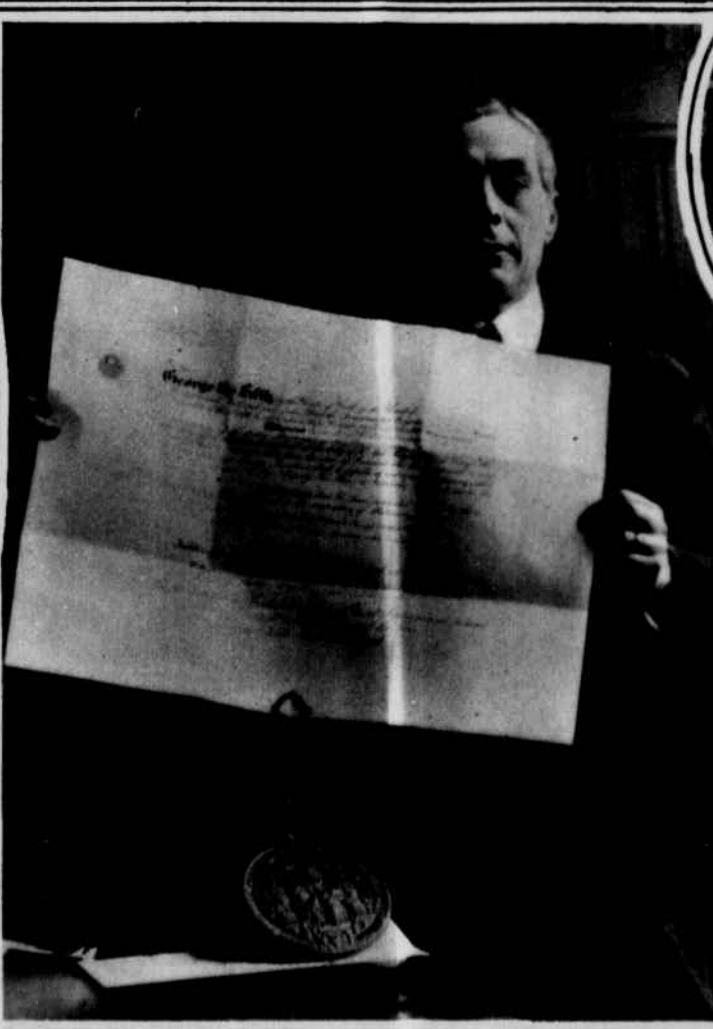

At left—A Red Cross train belonging to the forces of Chang-Tso-Lin, who has the best equipped army in China.

One of Chang-Tso-Lin's troop trains passing through Tientsin station. When there is no civil war to occupy them the Mukden General's fighters raid on their own account.

Irving T. Bush arriving on the Adriatic after a trip to London to inspect his great building enterprise there.

International.

The King's consent to the marriage of Princess Mary is in the form of an engrossed document, with the Great Seal attached. Sir Claud Schuster, Clerk of the Crown, is holding the parchment.

Kudel & Herbert.

Wide World.

A bust of the late Col. Theodore Roosevelt was unveiled at the Roosevelt School in New Rochelle by Mrs. Douglas Robinson. It is the work of James Earl Fraser. The photograph shows, from left to right: J. G. Wilkinson, Frank J. Hermes, Mrs. Regina Niehaus, Mrs. Hermes, Mrs. Robinson, Dr. Sanford, W. G. Inglis, Dr. Albert Leonard and George G. Raymond.

At right—Here are Lady Marjorie Hanly, who is the fourth daughter of the Earl of Denbigh, and her little girl, Pamela.

Kedel & Herbert.